This is the story of how Silicon Valley's most secretive company became entangled in one of the most brutal conflicts of our time.

As Israel ramped up its military campaign in Gaza, reports surfaced of an AI-powered system called Lavender, used to generate thousands of potential targets, many of them civilians. While Palantir Technologies denies direct involvement, the company's deepening ties to Israel's defense apparatus, and its broader role in developing military-grade AI, raise urgent questions.

In this investigation, we examine the rise of AI-assisted warfare, the influence of Palantir and its CEO Alex Karp, and the deadly consequences of handing targeting decisions to algorithms. From the halls of Silicon Valley to the rubble of Gaza, this video explores how data, power, and war are converging, with little oversight and devastating human cost.

I already saw a lot about this guy, but wanted to tell you thank you very much for sharing. People still do not believe Palantir is killing NOW, children in Gaza. They believe it is kind of a hysteric future scenario. It is a nightmare.

No way Palantir is spending their money. They always have a way to make the US taxpayer foot the bill. Vote the warmongers out.
